garrett stewart closed circuits screening narrative

February 17th, 2020 - a spate of academic monographs in recent years has highlighted the encounters and implications between cinema television and surveillance. What these studies share is the conviction that surveillance, a term that each study defines in its own way, is more than a narrative device or motif whose noticeable recurrency on contemporary screens alone would merit closer inspection.

When Ridley Scott envisioned Blade Runner's set as Hong Kong on a Bad Day, he nodded to the city's overcrowding as well as its widespread use of surveillance. But while Scott brought Hong Kong and surveillance into the global film repertoire, the city's own cinema has remained outside of the global surveillance discussion. In Arresting Cinema, Karen Fang delivers a unifying account of Hong Kong cinema and surveillance studies.
